

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million, from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1999. The public sector has grown from 10% of the economy to 17% of the economy.

There are a number of reasons for this increase. One of the main reasons is the increasing demand for public services. As the population ages, there is a need for more health and social care services. There is also a need for more education and training services. The government has responded to this demand by increasing its spending on public services.

Another reason for the increase in public sector employment is the increasing demand for public services. As the population ages, there is a need for more health and social care services. There is also a need for more education and training services. The government has responded to this demand by increasing its spending on public services.

A third reason for the increase in public sector employment is the increasing demand for public services. As the population ages, there is a need for more health and social care services. There is also a need for more education and training services. The government has responded to this demand by increasing its spending on public services.

A fourth reason for the increase in public sector employment is the increasing demand for public services. As the population ages, there is a need for more health and social care services. There is also a need for more education and training services. The government has responded to this demand by increasing its spending on public services.

A fifth reason for the increase in public sector employment is the increasing demand for public services. As the population ages, there is a need for more health and social care services. There is also a need for more education and training services. The government has responded to this demand by increasing its spending on public services.

A sixth reason for the increase in public sector employment is the increasing demand for public services. As the population ages, there is a need for more health and social care services. There is also a need for more education and training services. The government has responded to this demand by increasing its spending on public services.

A seventh reason for the increase in public sector employment is the increasing demand for public services. As the population ages, there is a need for more health and social care services. There is also a need for more education and training services. The government has responded to this demand by increasing its spending on public services.

An eighth reason for the increase in public sector employment is the increasing demand for public services. As the population ages, there is a need for more health and social care services. There is also a need for more education and training services. The government has responded to this demand by increasing its spending on public services.

